CURRENT BOOK PROJECT

From Scripture to Script: The Hebrew Bible on the Early English Stage examines how England's cultural obsession with wisdom-seeking and biblical study as a mode of moral instruction plays out in the drama of the period, when edification and entertainment were expected of both stage and pulpit. Recognizing that the patrons of London's public theaters also occupied parish pews, I show how playwrights adopt and adapt scriptural narratives, tropes, and paradigms from received Hebraic texts, and how English audiences attended to those allusions. I contend that the widespread investment in legitimized reading strategies and desire for authorized elucidation finds creative and complex expression in early modern dramas beholden to protagonists and passages from the Hebrew Bible. Due to the concise and compact nature of scripture, when writers craft plays based on the biblical narratives, they make interpretive decisions about how to develop the plot, protagonists, and dialogue in relation to their source material. By drawing the works of Renaissance playwrights like Peele, Shakespeare, and Fletcher into dialogue with religious discourse of the period, I explore drama as a mode of exegesis and exegesis as a dramatic activity, and argue that such works offer a deeper understanding of Western literature's indebtedness toward Judaic scripture and its exegetical traditions.
